SAO

SAOWEE.CARRD.CO/

How long have you been creating art?

Long enough! :D. I started having an interest probably around 6-7 years old.

What do you love to draw the most?

If I have the time, I would like to draw comics again, but I do love pretty things. In the Final Fantasy XIV sense, I like drawing Lalafells and Miqo'te. I would like to be able to draw minions too, if given the chance.

What motivates you to draw?

Music! I'm still into JPOP/JROCK music, even though I watch less anime now than before. I keep a certain playlist that motivates me to draw. It sometimes helps me to decide on poses I want to put in my drawing. I also have a playlist of game BGMs when I want to be in the mood for drawing, but just don't want voices at the moment. Other motivations are from characters with great/coordinated glamours. :D

Who/What is the inspiration behind your art?

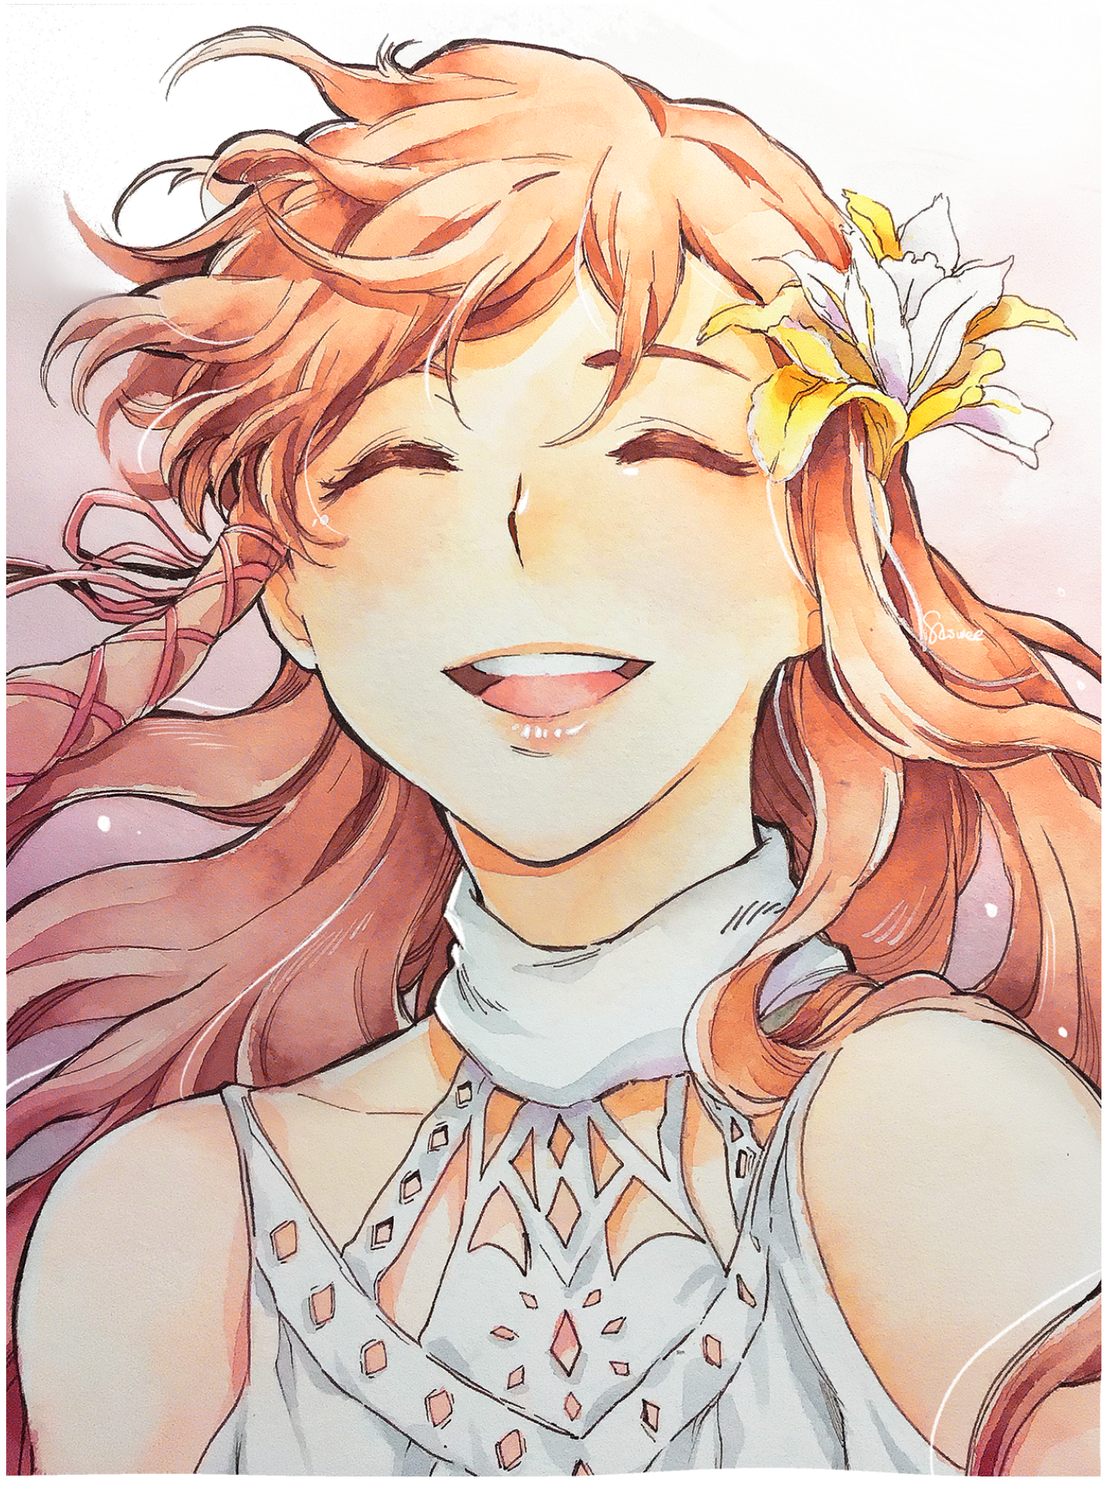

I wanted to be a lot of things when I was younger or even before I started taking an interest in drawing. I do recall I wanted to be a doctor, a teacher, astronaut, painter, and even a firefighter! I wouldn't say it's a direct inspiration, but I guess all those feelings contributed to what I wanted to do right now. Since I can't be all of those things I wanted when I was a kid, I might as well be someone that can create something from imagination.

Do you accept commissions?

I do, actually! As of the moment, I have a lot on my plate, but from time to time I open my commissions on ko-fi (Usually monthly)!

Botanical Wonders and You

A Roleplayer's Guide to Plantlife

by Khantyer Dothark

In the vast world of Final Fantasy, the breadth of plants and flora can be daunting, especially for those that would like to use them for roleplay. But fear not! Here are a few examples of edible and medicinal plants one can use to add to their immersion, as well as spice up their scene with culinary potentials!

Old World Fig

A symbol of long life and femininity, this autumn fruit was originally brought from its homeland to Eorzea by the Sharlayans.

A delightful treat, commonly used in high-born and common pastries. Or, if one is versed in pickling, they can make a nice sauce to add flavor to exotic dishes.

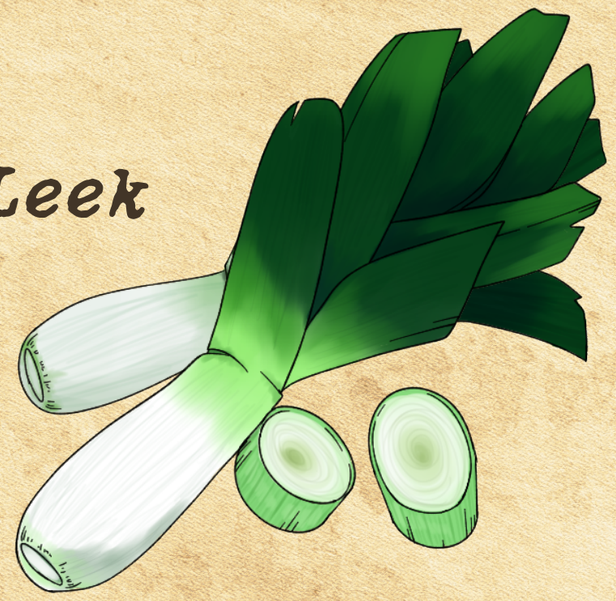

Thanalan Tea Leaves

These leaves, when dried and steeped in hot water, create a sweet-smelling tea known for its curative properties.

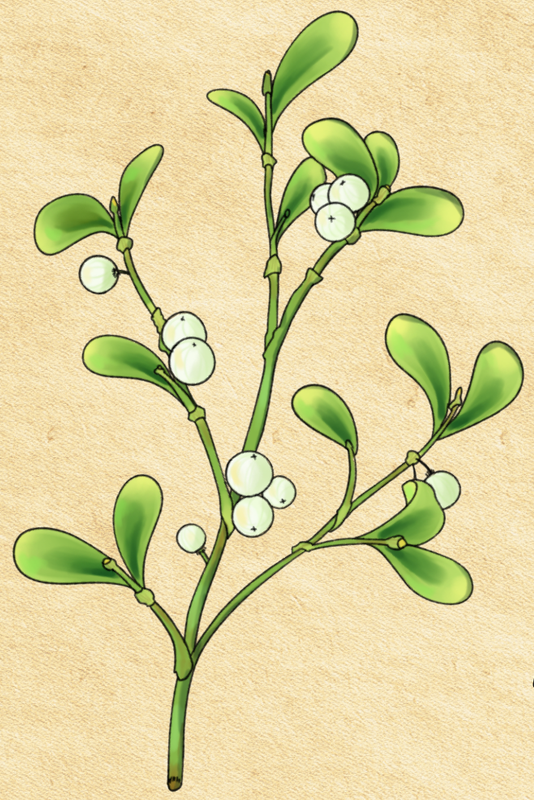

A simple additive to make a home feel more welcoming by scent alone, but can be a nice go-to for a 'tea time' setting. Since these leaves are also used in tanning, they can serve as trade goods for leatherworkers or a traveling merchant.

La Noscean Leek

A rare variety of leek, typically harvested young for a milder flavor.

The mild taste can mak for a pleasant soup while on the road, or a lovely garnish for fish and poultry dishes. If playing as a grocer or trader, be sure to have these local goods on hand.

Tinolqa Misletoe

A variety of parasitic plant that is commonly found growing on trees in the Black Shroud.

Since some hunters tend to use what is provided by nature to give them an edge, the poison made from the mistletoe's berries can be used to tip arrowheads or line blade edges.

Mugwort

The young leaves of the mugwort plant are used not only as a spice in cooking, but also as a curative agent in various unguents.

Sometimes perceived as a 'smelly' plant, the leaves can be dried and then pressed to be put to medicinal use, be it as a salve to counteract infectious wounds or mixed with pure water and consumed as a restorative alchemic remedy.

Chamomile

A fragrant yellow flower found growing throughout Vylbrand.

Another consideration for 'tea time' or simply as a means to settle an upset stomach. Travelers can find this plant anywhere. And the mild fragrance makes it a soothing remedy for the sleepless adventurer.

Moko Grass

A common grass found growing throughout Aldenard. From its stalks, hempen yarn is created.

Most garbs are made from some kind of cloth, especially local and commonly worn threads. Unless otherwise stated by the more exotic clothier, most shops are considered to carry hempen cloth.

Marjoram

A sweet-smelling herb used in cooking and in medicines.

An herb that adds a delightful sweetness to most dishes, but is also used in remedies to soothe sore throats. A delight among the scholars!

Gem Algae

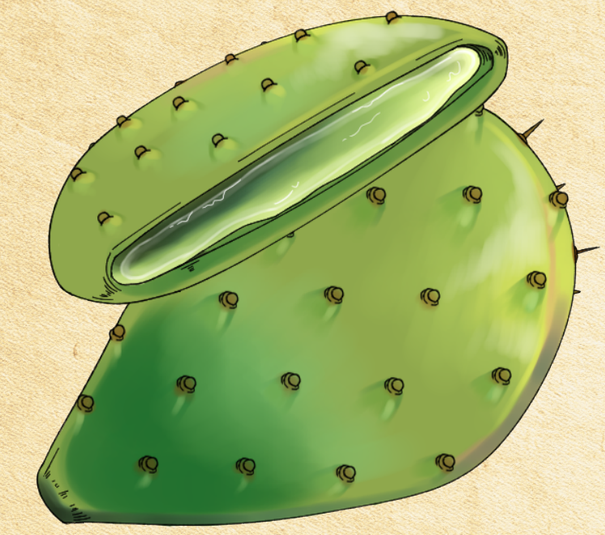

A variety of algae found in the Ruby Sea, commonly harvested for its salt.

As salt is commonly used to preserve meats, this additive can fetch a nice price for the traveling or Hingan local merchant.be put to medicinal use, be it as a salve to counteract infectious wounds or mixed with pure water and consumed as a restorative alchemic remedy.

Nopales

A fragrant yellow flower found growing throughout Vylbrand.

This succulent plant can provide needed hydration for the unprepared traveling the Sagolii Desert.

Gelmorra Ruins

NORTH SHROUD(23, 24)

The Gelmorra Ruins, the only known above-ground Gelmorran structure, were once surrounded by columns and contained a large platform with a 15-20 yalm hole in the middle. Years ago, curious passersby would have been keen to peer into the depths below, but the calamity further devastated the ruins. The platform now lies half buried and wholly fractured.

The Iron Feast

DRAVANIAN FORELANDS (31, 5)

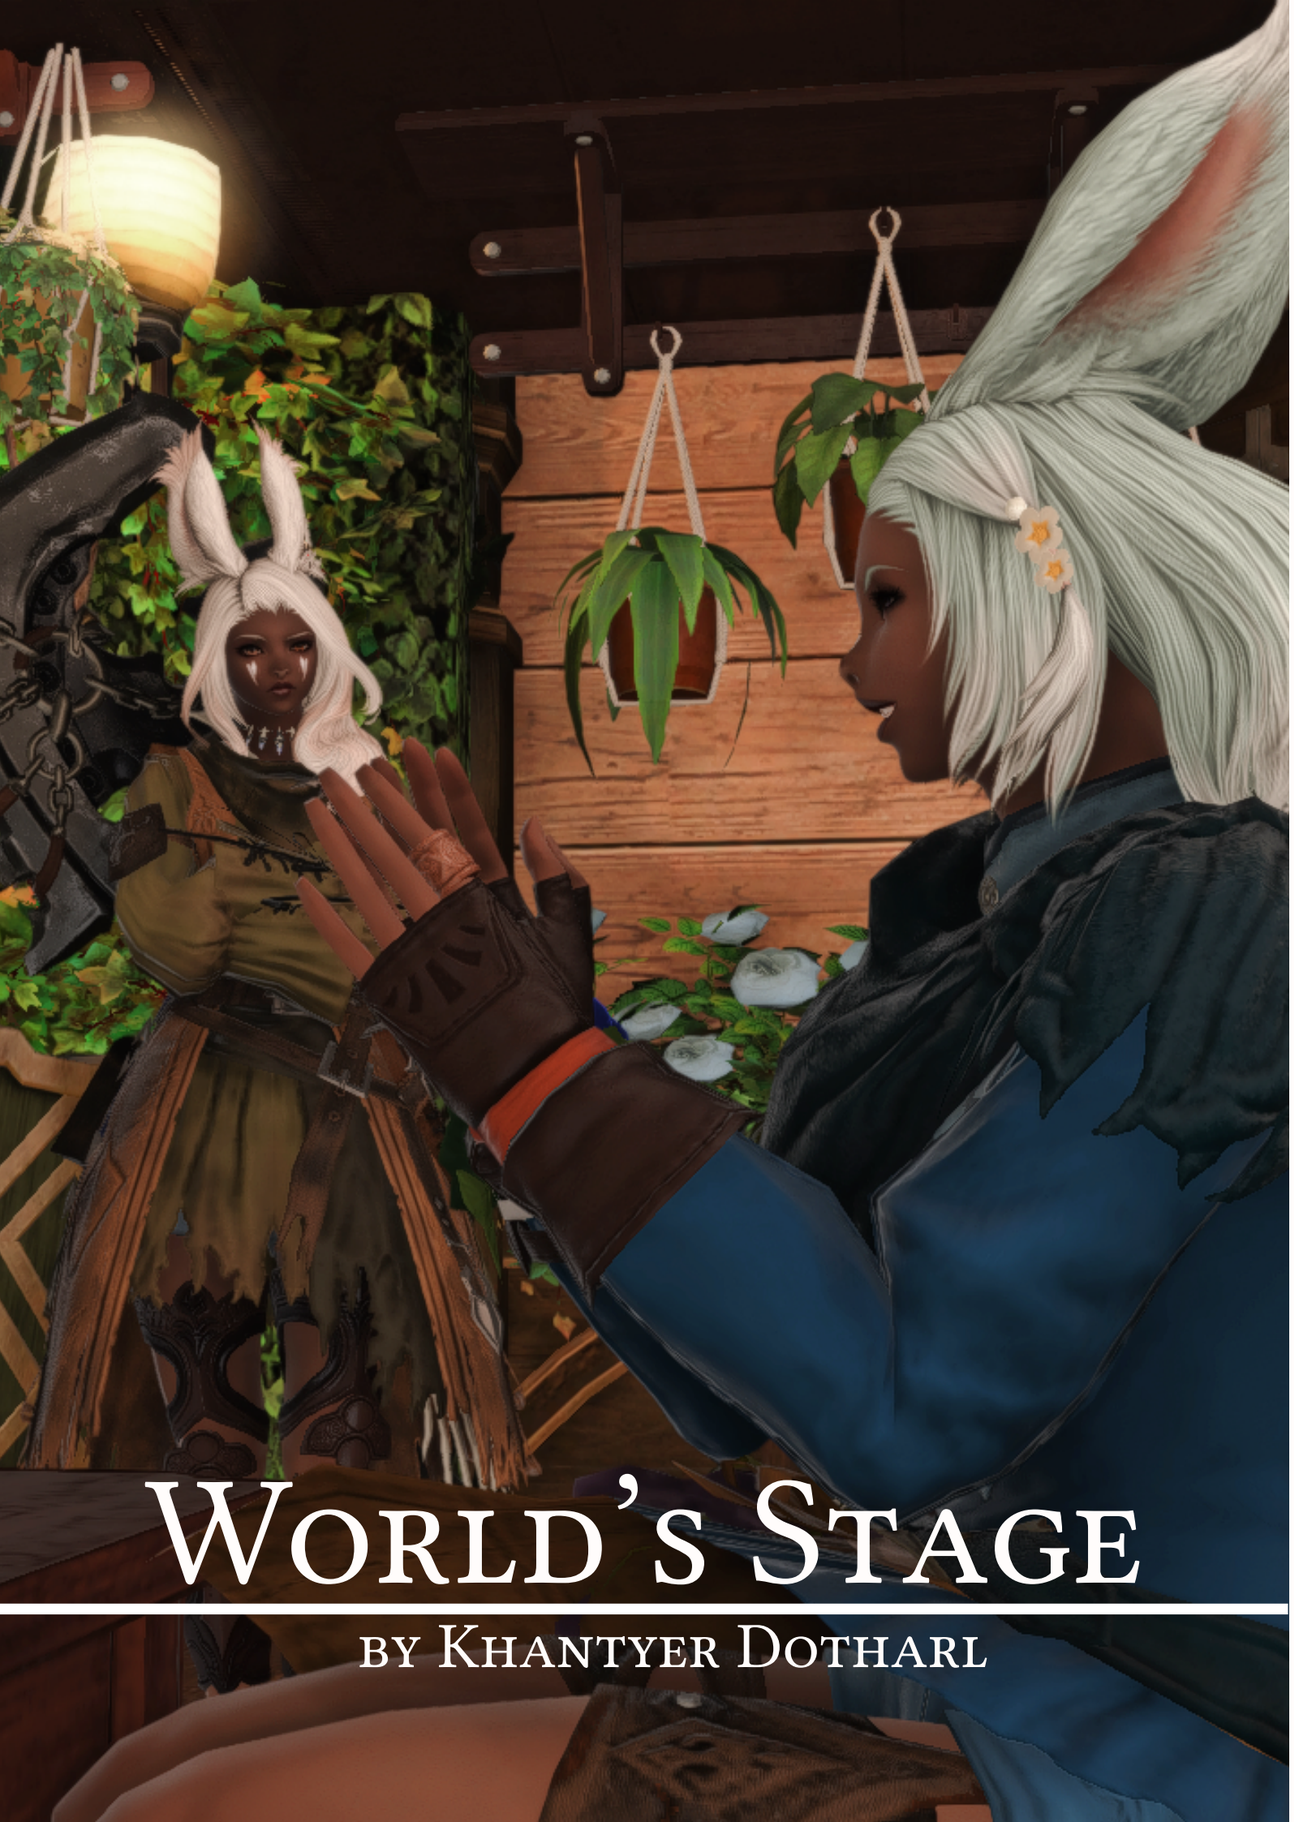

Once considered a place of rest for climbers after their spiritual pilgrimage atop Sohm Al, after man's betrayal the Iron Feast became another place razed by the fury of dragons. Presently, the primary visitors of this locale are various beasts congregating to drink from the clear waters which flow freely from the great structure—and the hungry dragons lying in wait for their unsuspecting feast.

Prism Lake

YANXIA (27, 6)

A mystifying lake carved out in steps, Prism Lake's waters have encapsulated the colors of the rainbow. Some would ascribe the mysterious, albeit remarkable, colors of the lake to the accumulation of exposed crystals surrounding the area, but legends reveal a tale of an ethereal being having constructed a bridge made from a rainbow for her mortal love.

World's Stage

BY KHANTYER DOTHARL

Table Manners

Last month we talked about a couple different kinds of romance. (It was February, of course!) This time we are going to backtrack a little to touch on a few elements of roleplay essential to the experience. Perhaps you're thinking, "but I already know HOW to roleplay," and if so—carry on. But for those starting or even restarting their experience, hopefully you will take these considerations and find them useful.

Flow

Think about having a conversation with your friend. It can be light and comfortable, or something serious that requires thought and consideration. Or perhaps you're together to gossip. Whatever the reason, flow is part of the shared dialogue. The tempo and frequency in roleplay can be used to convey how a character is feeling. This can be a good thing, especially to show the 'excitable' side of a character, however, frequent posts (mainly short one-liners) can be seen as impatient and might discourage the other participant from replying.

There is nothing wrong with being excited and having a lot to say in a given situation, but keep in mind that not all roleplayers reply at the same speed. Some are "para" or paragraph roleplayers, meaning they contribute to the conversation in multiple, large posts. They can get a little wordy, but most often hold information pertaining to the conversation at hand and tend to leave an opening for the other participants to contribute.

Once you and your participants are comfortable with each other's pace, do what you can to avoid 'dead air' lapses in the conversation that can span for minutes only to be returned by a short post. When that happens, a change in topic might be needed, depending on the mood. Perhaps something 'light' to offset the 'heavy,' or extend interest to what the characters might do in the realm. However, if nothing comes to mind, there is nothing wrong with extending a polite wave and setting off to your next adventure.

Etiquette

With as many events as there are roleplayers in the realm, it can be overwhelming regarding what should or shouldn't be brought to the table. Beforehand, do a little research on the event you are attending or reach out to your RP partner about the mood for your conversation. This preemptive step shows not only character, but player interest, and gives you the opportunity to think on how your character would react in the environment. You wouldn't want to waltz into a gala and start talking about maiming unlawful pirates or heed the call of a hunt party dressed in a ball gown, interesting as that would be. Most arrive at specific events with expectations in place, and it is up to you as the player to respect the setting accordingly.

Read The Room

Following our previous suggestion, when arriving at an event, especially one you may not have been to before, be sure to read the room. Even if you have to stand to the side for a few minutes to watch the roleplay as it forms, those few minutes could help give you an idea if the situation is right for you or your character. With as many players and character types as there are, there is bound to be something for you and your tastes.

Listening to conversations could stimulate ideas from instances in your character's life to share, or guide them towards something new. However, if you cannot 'feel' the moment or inspiration, that's alright! Roleplay is meant to be stress-free as well as engaging. Never should you have to force yourself to be a part of the setting if it's not for you.

Hopefully you'll find these suggestions useful for your roleplay walkabout, and make sure to snap some fond memories to look back on and share!
Happy roleplaying!

Khantyer
